

Reflection

11/1a
Kumel H

Writing this after the Election

I am going to start off by saying that I am more than surprised by the result. Honestly, I had thought Trump would win no questions asked. So when the Associated Press called it for Biden I was shocked. To be honest, I don't and never had high expectations for either candidate. The thing is we already had seen what Trump was like and from that we could 'predict' the future. Though a lot of people hate him, he as every person does, has highs and lows. I think in some senses he would prove much more competent when compared to Biden. This could include the economy and certain foreign relations. Joe Biden on the other hand would win, in my opinion, when it came to immigration laws, immigrants and certain minorities. I think his choice of VP also boasted people's opinion.

About the video, I thought it was interesting and brought a new perspective. I think it brought forth a multitude of valid points but I think it was really biased.

For example, All the examples of Joe Biden, though true, were from a long, long time ago. Furthermore all of the example were knit-picked to prove their point. Something interesting was the point about Jerry mandering and how both parties to do it

I think that both presidents would bring a similar end result, but will have different way to get there. Trump with economy, Biden with immigration laws. I think though that the wars will be the same, and no real change for the American people will happen. As such, I was never really a supporter of either side and now that Biden has won, I am not disappointed.

For example, All the examples of Joe Biden, though true, were from a long, long time ago. Furthermore all of the example were knit-picked to prove their point. Something interesting was the point about Jerry mandering and how both parties to do it

I think that both presidents would bring a similar end result, but will have different way to get there. Trump with economy, Biden with immigration laws. I think though that the wars will be the same, and no real change for the American people will happen. As such, I was never really a supporter of either side and now that Biden has won, I am not disappointed.

Reflection

11/1a
Kumel H

Writing this after the Election

I am going to start off by saying that I am more than surprised by the result. Honestly, I had thought Trump would win no questions asked. So when the Associated Press called it for Biden I was shocked. To be honest, I don't and never had high expectations for either candidate. The thing is we already had seen what Trump was like and from that we could 'predict' the future. Though a lot of people hate him, he as every person does, has highs and lows. I think in some senses he would prove much more competent when compared to Biden. This could include the economy and certain foreign relations. Joe Biden on the other hand would win, in my opinion, when it came to immigration laws, immigrants and certain minorities. I think his choice of VP also boosted people's opinion.

About the video, I thought it was interesting and brought a new perspective. I think it brought forth a multitude of valid points but I think it was really biased.